Death At An Apartment (Death Days Series #1) He creeps in the night doing his wickedness upon those who believe themselves oh so safe. Tonight he will feast on one of the weak and take from them the light of the world. Psychopath does not even begin to describe him. He is death. Sample Content: About 2500 words. She was his type. The type he liked to kill, but today, unfortunately, he had other targets. The man sitting next to her wore a big drab black coat in the dimly lit bar. He wasn't out of place in a place like this where upper class workers would come to play after a hard day at the office struggling with the stress of meetings and endless paperwork. He could understand. During his daily life he was a banker. The man took a drink from his bottle of beer and glanced at the woman who was talking to another young similarly dressed woman to her left. The watcher could already see that there was no chance. This woman was far out of this one's league. The night went on and customers came in and out. The young woman and her friend left. The man drank a number of beers before standing up to leave the bar. The one in the corner stood up as well and picked up his briefcase and coat. He had brought along some special equipment for tonight's entertainment. Fish Food (Death Days Series #2) The man is back and this time he's in Hawaii. A rest from his tired kill and kill some more lifestyle is needed, but is this really a rest? A noisy bunch of neighbors will test his limits and he will be hard-pressed to stay his hand. Another crazy kill fest from the killer with no name. Sample Content: This story is about 2500 words. beavers all night and then they woke up early to come outside and play games when civilized people would be sleeping. The banker hadn't had a good proper night sleep for two days now. That was more than enough reason to bury them all. He wished the clerk would have let him move his tent. He had asked, but she had said that the camping ground was full and that they didn't have any openings at any of their other connected sites. He wondered if he should kill her too. Ah, it is a difficult life. When am I just going to be able to relax and enjoy killing some beautiful young girl? It had been weeks with killing that man at the bar over that bad business deal, that other matter, which really didn't count, and being busy with work. He hadn't carved young flesh into small pieces for far too long. He stood up and went to his tent. He would need to prepare.
